THE CHURCHES AND CLERGY OF CHICAGO.

No. 5.

ST. ANSGARIUS CHURCH.

REV. GUSTAVUS UNONIUS, RECTOR.

The design and scope of these articles admits of considerable latitude in speaking of the Clergy of Chicago; and as Mr. Unonius is rather a remarkable man, we shall treat our subject to-day somewhat at length, and the clergyman first, and of his church afterwards.

GUSTAVUS UNONIUS was born on the 25th of August, 1809, at Hessingfors, in Finland, which country now belongs to Russia, and has long been a province of the Russian empire. His parents, however, had remained subjects of Sweden, whom his father was a civil officer, and into which country he was removed as a child, and into which he was a year old. He passed his childhood in one of those beautiful and romantic spots on the shores of the sea of Aaland, for which Sweden and her mountainous and evergreen Coasts is so celebrated.

Mr. Unonius learned first intended for the naval military service of his country. At the age of fourteen he was removed as a cadet to the Swedish Royal Military School near Stockholm, and subsequently took part in three different expeditions of a Swedish man-of-war, on a cruise in the Baltic; and after the Peace of 1814, was for two years at the Military College of Marieberg, in Stockholm. After a few years study here, during which time he wrote for some periodicals, and published a small volume of poems, he passed his examination as Lieutenant of the Staff, and was employed at the office of government near that province of which Upsala is the county seat.

At this time the recent revolutions, which had been consummated in the European countries had transpired, and the new ideas of liberty and popular sovereignty had found their way into the hereditary kingdom of Sweden. In that country, the "inherent rights of man" are protected by a constitutional monarchy, which gives to the citizens, with the exception perhaps of one or two particular points, as much true liberty as is enjoyed by the citizens of this country, and places the entire legislative power in the hands of the people themselves. But there were persons of an exclusive mind in Sweden, who were not willing to share with the citizens the rights in favor of democracy, in opposition to the governmental and existing institutions. To this party, Mr. Unonius united himself with all the zeal and impetuosity of his youthful years, and stood shot his. Unonius now thinks, that at that time he misunderstood the true nature of liberty, and entertained mistaken views of the constitutional rights of the citizens. His sentiments, however were the honest convictions of his heart, and he gave vent to them in patriotic songs and speeches at the University with which he was connected, and in other ways, that he became obnoxious to the authorities and found that he had placed a bar to the way of his own advancement.

He, therefore, determined to emigrate to America, of which he had heard much, and where he imagined that he might find realized all his youthful dreams of a Utopia of freedom. To this end the people of Sweden did not enjoy the unrestricted right of emigration, but it was necessary that an especial permission should be petitioned for and granted by the government. At that time, however, a law was passed by the Diet, by which this privilege was allowed; and Mr. Unonius, with his lately married wife and two other friends, were the first who, under that law, asked for their passports and came to seek for a new home in our Western country. In 1841 they landed in New York, and immediately proceeded westward with the intention of settling in Chicago. The result of an accident, however, (it rather the hand of Providence, brought them to Milwaukee. Here, being entirely unacquainted without language, they determined to settle. Mr. Unonius purchased a tract of land twenty-eight miles west of Milwaukee, in what is now called Waukesha county. On the banks of a beautiful little lake in that neighborhood, he built his own log house, although he had never before taken an axe in his hand. The adventure-seeking, pioneering spirit of the Atlantic, Mr. Unonius and his wife established themselves in the little cabin, striven by whatever fate, which the inexperienced joiner and builder had not succeeded in joining together in such a manner as to make it a complete and comfortable shelter against the severity of the winter. It might have been a very Arcadian life, and it not been for various hardships and labors to which they were both entirely unaccustomed.—The former resident of Upsala was seen splitting his rails during the winter months, and when the spring came holding the plough.

In 1843 Mr. Unonius and his wife SUCCEEDED, now also a resident of his city, and an old acquaintance of Mr. Unonius, together with a few other Swedes, arrived, and built up their log cabins in the little place, the neighborhood of which Mr. Unonius had hitherto been the only settler. Another year made an increase to the settlement of more than fifty families from Norway. They were all protestants and members of the Lutheran Church, and soon established in their native land under Episcopal government. Here, finding themselves deprived of all the services of the Church, Mr. Unonius attempted in many instances to supply the want, and acted as a lay-reader, trying in that way as far as was in his power, to keep himself and his countrymen in the faith of their fathers; but difficulties so united things which were often apt to prevail in our distant settlements when they are deprived of the privileging of the gospel and the priesthood.

In the neighborhood of the Scandinavian settlement, where now the Washtenah Theological Seminary is located, a mission of the Protestant Episcopal Church had in the meantime been established. An intimate acquaintance was formed between these missionaries and Mr. Unonius, the result of which was, that, at the earnest request of his countrymen, he determined to devote the rest of his life to the ministry of the Gospel. He disposed of his little farm, and became again a student, in the fall, regard of manhood. Received as the infant institution of Nashota, he gave himself up entirely to the study of divinity. After two years he was admitted to the Deaconate and the Presidency Bishop of the Church, on the 16th of May 1846, by the Right Rev. Jackson Kemper, Missionary Bishop of the North West. Thus he became the first Swede or Collage, and the accomplished gentleman and scholar, adorning many circles in the West, and for the able Professor, has been widely known in that Church of which it is an ornament. At the same year Mr. Unonius was ordained Presbyter, and received the degree of D. D. After three years of labor as a missionary in various settlements of Swedes and Norwegians in Wisconsin, Dr. Unonius, with his family,
